The OSCAR Student Survey was developed in collaboration between Students as Scholars and Mason’s Office of Institutional Assessment. Items were developed to measure program and student learning outcomes over time as part of a longitudinal study of student learning. The survey’s three parts correspond to the three developmental levels of student learning outcomes identified by Mason faculty: Discovery, Scholarly Inquiry, and Creation of Scholarship. Survey data are collected from each participant multiple times throughout their involvement with the initiative, thus allowing us to learn about how their attitudes and reports of their own learning change over time. Thousands of participants are surveyed each year through their involvement in OSCAR activities, including discovery, inquiry, and research courses; undergraduate research groups; and the Undergraduate Research Scholars Program (URSP). This longitudinal data will help us understand student development over time, and identify which experiences have had the most impact.

Survey Components
The survey has three parts: Discovery Set, Course Set, and Individualized Scholarly Experience Set. Each set corresponds to the student learning outcomes for OSCAR’s three levels of scholarship experiences. The survey is administered to students online through their enrollment in the associated course or experience.

Using the Survey
The OSCAR Student Survey was developed as a program assessment instrument for the Students as Scholars initiative at George Mason University. Please use only with permission.
